

Where To Invest In Housing in the US In 2016 (According to the 'Forbes')

"With housing prices rising but wages stagnant, 2016 is likely to be a year of worsening affordability for homebuyers, especially low- and middle-income earners, according to Zillow, a real estate data-tracking company. That's bad news for many people hoping to buy a home for the first time. But for investors looking to put their money into rental properties, these economic conditions point to continued strength in that market." (Forbes magazine).

The Forbes teamed up with Local Market Monitor, a North Carolina-based data company and tracked home prices and economic factors in more than 300 housing markets, in order to search for the best US housing market for an investor. The result is a list of 2016's Best Buy Cities—the top 20 housing markets to invest in this year.

The magazine stated: "The clear takeaway: there are good values to be had in Florida, which placed seven cities on our list."

Want to read more? Press here for the full article